SUMMARY OF THE 'KWANG-PAO."

11th May. The paper of to-day opens with a wonderful story of a men and woman, husband and wife, who having come to straitened circumstances in Canton, go to Singapore in search of well-todo relatives. On their arrival in the capital no relatives could be found, and they had to endure much hardship until they devised the plan that women. the woman should go into service as an small and earn a few dollars to enable the man to return home, who on his departure agreed to return to Canton her friends, suspecting -foul play complain to the authorities, who order him to go to Singapore and bring his wife back. To this he agrees but he finds his wife married to another. What happened then to-morrow's issue promises to explain.

A poor woman who begged her living with a smart looking little boy of hers, is robbed of him by a designing woman, presumably a kidnapper. A man, shortly after his marriage, proceeds to of his death. A wife who received nothing but had treatment from her husband commits suicide. A man while passing by a quiet neighbourhood was accosted by two or three bad characters, who robbed seventy tasks from his person and wounded him in the bargain.

A passenger boat was attacked by pirates, and the amount of property stolen is about $200. A dragon boat collided with a junk and went down at once. Eight persons were drowned: Several thieves wore again arrested by the tithing stations. On enquiry being made, the men confessed their offences and are now undergo-At a place which was struck by lightning, the

The old chapel of St. Thomas à Becket is being prepared to receive the organ, and as dry rot was discovered in the floor it was necessary to remove the boards. While I was watching this being done yesterday I saw about 2 feet below, a small corner of what was apparently a large stone slab sticking out from under the bricks and rubble. I asked the men to clear this, and soon saw a cross out on it, which marked it as an altar-slab. We have since had it completely propovered, and find that it is undoubtedly the old altar-slab of the chapel. The centre cross and two end ones are quite plain, but the remaining two have perished. The masons say the slab is of Wilmoote stone, and it is beautifully polished in front, but much defaced on the top. Its dimensions are 9ft. 6in. long, 3ft. 44in. wide, and about 5in, thick. Of course we shall have it raised, and I hope Messrs. Bodley and Garner will find a proper use for it when our shurch restoration is completed.

According to the Low Times the captain of the Missouri in rescuing the living freight of the Danhtark has raised nice questions of law. A proof that the high prices recently paid for postage stamps are well maintained was shown by the recent sale of a portion of Mr. Castle's collection at the Auction Mart. This was the first three days' sale held in London, though such things are not uncommon in New-York. The stamps sold were only a portion of Mr. Castle's collection, as that gentleman still retains his starups of Occavia, to which he now devotes his outire attention Mr. Thomas Bull. of Old Jewry, the London stamp suctioneer, was as successful as usual, the prices realised. being very good. The highest price was £28. for the fourpence red (error of colour) triangular Capa of Good Hope stamp, printed from blocks, but the most interesting was Lot 610, the fourpence (rose) English stemp of 1855, printed on blue paper unusca. This stamp has never been known to fetch more than £7 to £8, but at this sale, after much empetition, it was knocked down to Mr. Theoder Chal, of Queen Victoria-street, for £15. An hour afterwards the auctioneer announced that Mr much time, as Mr. Buhl immediately bid £51 and bought the stamp without any further bidding. It may be interesting to the non-philatelic pubworth 4d., whoreas many other stamps are rarer used than unnied. In all, there were 903 lots offered for s.l., and the total amount realised

THE GAUNTLET CAST When supper was ended, the whole party ad fourned to the promenade outside the hotel where a fountain plashed in a basin, and in an aviage on a perch stood a scowling, draggled eagle, and beside the avlary were cages with mermots, smelling abominably, and fettered on a pitch of grass was a miserable chamois that segmed to have the mane of

It was delightful to walls, in the crisp pure air of evoning without cap or honnet, and watch the evening glow on the snow lelds, and listen to the tinkle of the bells as the cows were driven home from the Alpine pastures and diverged to their several stables from the main street. "Beaple Yeo came out after the party of Philip's hable, not hatless, and his puggary in the dusk flustered like a gigantic white moth. The chaplain for the summer from England was also walking in the grounds with his newly-married wife, a feeble youth with a high-pitched voice and a rackling laugh, who had cultivated a military moustache, to point out his imbecility, as the ass in the fable assumed a lion's skin, but was revealed as an ass on opening his mouth. CHAPTER XLIV. AND PICKED UP.

Matters that look serious at night shrink triffing significance in the morning. Philip rose refreshed by sleep, with a buoyancy of heart he had not experienced for many months, and a resolution to enjoy his holiday now that he was taking one. How often had he longed for the chance of making an excursion on the Continent, of seeing the snowy ranges of the Alps and studying fresh aspects of human life. Now the opportunity had come, and he must make the most of it. His prospects at home were not such as to discourage him, he was no longer the ruling manager of the Pennycomequick firm but he was not going to be kicked out of the concern as he had at first feared. Uncle Jeremish purposed to take him into partnership. make him working partner; and in all probabi lity he would be better off than with Mrs. Sidebottom consuming more than half the profits and contributing nothing.

"She is so charming," said Janet. "So amistyle," murmured Claudine Labarte. "Mais, quelle gaucherie," whispered the penultimate Laborte to the youngest sister. Then ensued a silence. Philip looked from his clear sky. Philip said sternly, " Pass me the butter." Those who seemed least concerned were the captain and Janet, who eat together and were when her attention was attracted by the wailing engrossed in little jokes that passed between them, and were not heard or regarded by the rest of the company.

"This is very unfortunate" said Mrs. Sidebottom; for we had made a clan to go to the Hospice together, and she would have paid her share of the carriage." Salome looked into her plate; her colour camaand went. She slid her hard into that of her Salome went to her and arrested her hands. I will not, I can not allow you to go. I should ever feel an ache in my heart to think that you had gone away without reconciliation."

Half laughing, half crying, she added, "I thought that if it could possibly be that you and my husband should meet you would become close friends-but I never supposed he would come out here to me-I mean I did not think he could leave his business. My husband is a great reader, and knows a great deal about things of which I am ignorant, and you have travelled and seen so much that your society will interest him immensely. Ok, do not go away."

The American girl went to the window, leaned both her arms folded on it, and looked out. She could see into the garden, and she observed Philip there, standing before the eagle's cage. He had a little twig in his hand, and he was thrusting it between the bars at the bird. She turned and said to Salome, "No-I will go. There are several reasons which urge me to go. The insult which I received from your husband for one-and already he had allowed me to see that he disliked and despised me -"No, indeed," interrupted Salome. "Admire you he might, but love you-"

" More than he loved you." " He could not do it." The gi I burst onto a mocking laugh. "What, you also hold me cheap, think there is nothing in me beside you—beside you—to love?"
